Lost Cornwall CORNWALL'S LOST HERITAGE

by Joanna Thomas

The dramatic shoreline and desolate moors of Cornwall are eternal attractions. However, there were just as fascinating, if less permanent, treasures in the Duchy now lost to change and progress. Local architecture and building methods have disappeared as well as traces of traditional trades. Joanna Thomas delves into the lifestyle of huers, explores the development of the Newlyn School and follows long-lost railway lines to bring this hidden history alive once more.

Who is Joanna Thomas?

Joanna Thomas was born in Bristol and her childhood holidays were spent in Cornwall where she gained a love for the county. Such was the pull to its coastline that she chose to return to study at University College Falmouth for a degree in Journalism and later a Masters in Professional Writing. Having worked as a broadcast and print journalist throughout the South West she has now settled in Cornwall, with her family, where she writes and teaches.
